

MORNING APPEAL.

Monday, October 24 1905

A WORD WITH TENDER-FOOTS.

When you hear a man vociferously denouncing W. M. Stewart as a carpet bagger set that man down at once as a tenderfoot.

In the old times when Nevada was a territory and struggling to be admitted into the sisterhood of States, when the pioneers were wrestling with the rocks of Washoe and the rebel element was striving for the supremacy, William Stewart was here helping to lay the foundations of the State and fighting the men who were trying to pull them down. He is fighting the same element now. He introduced the first resolution into the territorial legislature that was passed and sent across the plains by pony express to carry the assurance to Washington that Nevada was real and true.

Looking back on the past one sees his grand figure stalking among the pioneers and hears his voice ring out. Every man who was here in those critical, bustling times recites with uplifted hand and proud voice the history of Stewart's works in shaping the destinies of this State.

The people of those times recognizing his tireless energy his trustiness and ability sent him two terms to represent them in the Senate of the United States. How well he did his work every old resident can tell and the laws he framed to foster industries stand upon the statute books today as monuments to his industry in Washington.

His talents made him in demand in larger fields, and he roamed over the West, taking the lead in nearly every mining suit of importance that has been tried on this Coast for years. When the Republican party saw its interests menaced by the prospect of Fair's return to Washington they called upon Stewart to come back and lead the hosts to victory. Today he heads the fray; his voice rings out clear and full above the din, and his tireless hand smites the foe.

Who are the men now barking at his heels? All of them are "tenderfoots" of the last ten years, whiffet politicians, lawyers who have failed in their professions, carpet-baggers writers imported for the campaign, the hungry Hessians of the pen auctioneering their slanders to the highest bidder, bums, loafers, cheek guerrillas, drones, non-producers, and the floats of the decaying camps which have been drifting about ever since the Democratic party succeeded in spreading ruin over this State by its war on silver. Most of the men who are now assailing Stewart tramped into this State within the last few years, and lacking the energy, grit and perserverance to make a living here, curse with foaming lips the man who can.

The men who do the howling against Stewart constitute the real, genuine grip sack brigade of later years, and some of them are of such recent arrival that they do not know that Stewart ever lived here at all.

THE SAME OLD BLIND.

The Virginia Chronicle six years ago raised the railroad issue and called upon the people of this State to elect a Democratic Legislature, and pledged low fares and freights all over Nevada. Residents of the sagebrush were to be able to go to San Francisco from Pahrump for six dollars, and seventy-five per cent. was to be knocked off the existing freight schedule. It was indeed an alluring picture, and hundreds of people voted the Democratic Legislative ticket, with the idea that the railroad reforms carried out by a Democratic Legislature would change the State from scenes of bankruptcy and despair into a vast picnic ground, with the Virginia Chronicle furnishing the brass bands at its own expense. Under this cry a class of men were scooped together, the like of which has never before been herded in Carson City. They paid no attention to the pledges under which they were elected, and it was soon apparent that the only object which called them together was the election of Col. James G. Fair. The railroad issue was merely a cheap blind to catch the votes which Fair's money could not buy, and after the adjournment a groan of disgust went up all over the State.

Having won once on this trick Fair has hired a man to work the same old game again, and is couching behind the imported anti-railroad scarecrow which is now fluttering in the Democratic corn field.

SLAPJACK JOHNNY.

[Contributed.]

They had him—a hundred inexorable men,
Had the sport who pumped lead into Paddy McCann;
With his arms tightly pinioned, and pale as a corpse,
They hoisted him on to the back of a horse,
Just a suitable height from the ground to swing free,
When they'd coupled him fast to the limb of a tree.

Now old Dobie Joe, the worst man on the slope,
And boss of the party, was knotting the rope,
When a woman's soft voice made the feeble plea heard,
"Please, sir, may I speak to him—only a word!"

Then Dobie called out, as he eyed in raskance,
"It's his gal, Slapjack Johnny, jes give her a chance."
The culprit bent low as she lifted her face,
And reached up her hands for a final embrace;

A whisp'r, a thrust that sent blood through his veins;
His hands were unfastened, he gathered the reins;
While into the crupper she struck the knife free,
And cried, "For your life, Bob!—don't think about me."

As fierce as the thunderbolt spinters the cloud,
The terrified steed rived asunder the crowd;
The bullets hissed thick through the air, but no man
Was loathed that morning but Paddy McCann;

Then the buffed crowd turned in its anger and swore
That since Bob had escaped they'd hang up his rescuer.

But old Dobie jumped to the fore, and he said,
"I'll be d—d if yer rattle a hair of her head,
Withouten you're achin' to see me turn loose;
For I ever stand with my neck in a noose."

It's a girl jes like her I wish for—that's all,
She's a boss of the road, and the belle of the ball."
